

Bill Lamb was a kind and caring man. He was a thoughtful designer and architect. Most memorably, he was incredibly generous in lending his expertise to improve Charlestown's built environment.

The next time you visit City Square, I encourage you to pause and reflect on how this beautiful space is an example of Bill's legacy, manifest in a most tangible way.

I also encourage you to think about how we can carry on Bill's legacy by seeking to embody his spirit of collaboration, respect and humility in our own lives. In this way we can all truly honor Bill's extraordinary service to his neighbors and his neighborhood.

Ted Schwartzberg, AICP is Senior Planner in the Boston Planning & Development Agency.